Remedial Binge Watching

This course is an exploration of beginning college life through and with a television screen. There are countless representations of what college is, what college means, and what it leads to. Just how accurate are these depictions? In this course, we will focus on understanding college the way outsiders (actors, directors, producers) are picturing it to be, by contrast with the first-hand experience of being in college in the twenty-first century. Through individual and group presentations, students will present a movie or television series of their choice in terms of its relevance to their own situations. We will debate the main issues as a group and reflect on how they affect our perception as we deal with the expectations of a new college environment.
